

Tony Blair Dismisses Trump's Coronavirus Leadership in Call for More Global Government

Original article here

The MURDERER Tony Blair urges more globalism as the solution for the world's problems. Tony Blair and George Bush were the liars that used America's NSA and Britain's GCHQ to spy on UN officials to rig their vote in a run up to the illegal and unwarranted attack on Iraq that murdered 288,000 – 500,000 innocent people. The scheme was based on America's lies that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction. Here is an edited video of Bush from the 2004 Radio and Television Correspondents' Association Dinner making a joke of the fact that there were no WMD. Here is media coverage of his comments and the CSPAN record if you want to fact check it. The lying sack of excrement Blair and his government avoided being tried as war criminals by dropping the charges against Katherine Gun, the GCHQ employee who exposed them on behalf of the British people. Of course they are trying to bury their lies behind national security blather to avoid bringing it out. Except it was all BS, so now the public should accept the claim that bullshit under a black cloth is no longer bullshit and the tactics are not equally BS? Now Blair crawls out of his rat hole assured that his criminality is effectively hidden behind state secrets nonsense to brag about working well with Bill Clinton, you know, the creep that used his protection detail to procure women for him so he could get his organ whistled in the back seat of a car. And in an attempt to wipe himself Blair drags in Obama, the rocket scientist who cozied up to the same group of corrupt intelligence agencies so that he could undermine an incoming government. What we have here is two murderers, a sex fiend who thinks he is a lay scientist sticking his cigars in vaginas to see if it affects the flavor of the leaf, and a water boy for the intelligence agencies who gets a favor back by participating in spying on American citizens, I guess to carry off a reverse lynching. The water boy blew any legacy he might have had, proving he is nothing more than an empty suit compared to Martin Luther King Jr. Sure, let's listen to these poor excuses for human beings about how to run the world.

Simon Kent 25 May 2020

JUSTIN TALLIS/AFP/Getty

Former UK Prime Minister Tony Blair has airily dismissed U.S. President Donald Trump's leadership during the Chinese coronavirus pandemic, instead harking back to his work alongside Bill Clinton and Barack Obama as examples of how global inter-governmental cooperation can win the day.

His remarks in an interview with NBC News last Friday followed an earlier intervention in the crisis when his own globalist think tank claimed it is "embedded in governments around the world," as Breitbart News reported.

In his most recent observations, he told NBC News he was worried about the lack of global coordination in tackling the crisis.

"The worry I have that an absence of global coordination and global leadership that's necessary for it is a huge problem," he said.

"When I think back to the times when I'm dealing with American presidents whether it's Bill Clinton or George Bush, Barack Obama as well, the most important thing at a time like this is to say, 'How do you bring the world together?'"

Video link to Blair interview from original story

By building more and bigger global government, Blair believes leaders could find a vaccine together, accelerate the development of therapeutics and testing capability, while keeping the international economy afloat.

"It's that global coordination, the absence of which means that each individual country's less effective at dealing with the disease. That's the thing that worries me," he stated.

The left-wing former Labour leader was asked his opinion on Trump's suggestions on fighting the epidemic, he said: "I think most people would understand what I would think, but it's probably better sometimes not to say it."

Earlier this month the Tony Blair Institute announced it has "teams" advising world governments "to keep their people safe during this pandemic — not just in respect of Covid-19 itself but also the political and economic collateral damage."

It also echoed his own personal call for more resources to be poured into the World Health Organization:

Our teams are now embedded in governments around the world, helping them to keep their people safe during this pandemic — not just in respect of Covid-19 itself but also the political and economic collateral damage.

Remember, Blair is the lying, conniving asshole that supported the war on Iraq, that murdered between 288,000 and 500,000 innocent people, all based on lies Blair and his government knew about, and covered in the movie "Official Secrets."

Watch Tony Blair's update on our response to #COVID19 pic.twitter.com/7G8ld9MTP1

— Tony Blair Institute (@InstituteGC) May 9, 2020

During his tenure as prime minister, Blair was a key ally of U.S. President George W. Bush. Under his leadership, the U.K. joined the U.S.-led coalition fighting in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Please, let's not describe Blair's tenure as "leadership" unless we can also describe Al Capone as the "leader" who continued to supply America's thirsty drinkers with prohibition booze in spite of many obstacles, and had to kill off a few guys along the way who objected to his franchise. Who writes this crap?

In comments made after the release of a 2016 report on the UK's entry into the Iraq conflict, John Chilcot said he did not believe Tony Blair was "straight with the nation" over the issue.

Speaking to BBC News, the chairman of the public inquiry into the 2003 military engagement said Blair pinned his account of events leading up to the war on belief rather than fact.

Give me a break. I suppose Hitler suffered from a misguided sense of belief too?